Klamath River Project

ABSTRACT

The California Department of Fish and Game's (CDFG), Klamath River Project (KRP) conducts spawning ground surveys (carcass surveys) on Bogus Creek annually, during the fall-run Chinook salmon (Oncorhynchus tshawytscha) spawning season. The purpose of these surveys is to determine the abundance and timing of the migration of adult fall-run Chinook salmon into Bogus Creek and to characterize the run in terms of age and sex composition. In 2003 a video counting weir was installed at the Bogus Creek Fish Counting Facility to provide a more accurate estimate of the escapement of Chinook salmon in Bogus Creek. A total of 13,125 fall-run Chinook salmon were observed at the BCFCF during the 2003 spawning season. Approximately 2,485 fall-run Chinook salmon were observed during spawning ground surveys within Reach 1, located downstream of the BCFCF. Therefore, the total run size of fall-run Chinook salmon in Bogus Creek is estimated to be 15,610. Based on the proportion of male and female Chinook salmon observed in the spawning ground surveys, male Chinook salmon comprised 38% of the run and females comprised 62% of the run. Analysis of the length frequency distribution for Chinook salmon measured during the spawning ground survey indicates that grilse were ≤ 57 cm in fork length. Based on this determination, the Chinook salmon run in Bogus Creek was comprised of approximately 231 (1.5%) grilse and 15,379 (98.5%) adults. Male Chinook salmon ranged in fork length from 44 cm to 107 cm with an average fork length of 80 cm and females ranged in fork length from 50 cm to 95 cm with an average fork length of 75 cm. Chinook salmon heads (containing CWTs) were collected from a total of 85 ad-clipped fish that were recovered during spawning ground survey efforts. Staff was able to recovery and read the CWT from 59 of the heads collected during the survey. Of the remaining 26 ad-clipped fish, 7 heads contained tags were unreadable, 6 heads contained tags were lost while attempting to remove them from the head, 12 heads did not contain a tag, and 1 head was lost. In order to estimate the probable origin of the 26 ad-clipped fish for which there was no tag, or had a tag that was unreadable, staff assigned a code to these 26 ad-clipped fish based on the proportional distribution of the 59 tags that were readable. Hatchery origin fall Chinook salmon account for 17% (2,722 fish) of the total fall Chinook salmon run observed in Bogus Creek.

INTRODUCTION

Study Location and Run Timing

Bogus Creek is located on the east side of the Klamath River (between river mile 189 and 190) in Siskiyou County, approximately 120 miles north of Redding, near the Oregon border (Fig. 1) and immediately downstream of the IGH (a mitigation hatchery, established in 1966). Fall-run Chinook salmon return to Bogus Creek to spawn from mid September to early November. The coho salmon spawning run occurs from late October to early January and steelhead run from November to March.

Fish Marking Weir

The purpose of the weir is to mark Chinook with an opercle punch, which is used for the Petersen mark and recapture population estimate (Ricker 1975) and to collect the biological data necessary to characterize the run (sex composition, fork lengths, and scale samples). The CDFG received funds from the Klamath River Basin Conservation Area Restoration Program to aid in the operation of the weir and conduct spawning ground surveys on Bogus Creek during the 2002 Chinook spawning season.

Klamath Restoration Program

The Klamath River Basin Conservation Area Restoration Program was established in 1986 by the Klamath Act (Public Law 99-552). The purpose of this 20-year program is to restore anadromous fish in the Klamath River basin, primarily salmon and steelhead. The Klamath Act established two federal advisory committees: the Klamath River Basin Fisheries Task Force (Task Force) and the Klamath Fishery Management Council (KMFC). The KMFC and the Task Force consist of members from various interest groups including commercial and recreational fishermen, Native American tribes, as well as state and federal agencies. The goal of the KMFC and the Task Force is to ensure continued viable populations of anadromous fish in the Klamath Basin by managing in-river and ocean harvest of Klamath Basin anadromous fish and providing funding for restoration projects.

Klamath River Project and Bogus Creek Study

The Bogus Creek study is one component of the KRP (initiated in 1978). The goals of the KRP include obtaining information on species composition, spawning distribution, fork length frequency and sex ratios for salmonids (primarily Chinook) in various tributaries to the Klamath River including the Salmon, Scott, and Shasta rivers, as well as Bogus Creek and a dozen other small tributaries. Bogus Creek is particularly important because it is a major salmon spawning tributary, despite its small size. For example, during the 1996-98 spawning seasons, an average of 30.6% (8,914) of the total number of natural adult spawners above the Trinity River confluence were estimated to have entered Bogus Creek to spawn. Therefore, a significant portion of natural escapement to the Klamath Basin would be unaccounted for if the Bogus Creek studies were not conducted. In addition to providing valuable escapement estimates to the KMFC and the Pacific Fisheries Management Council for the effective management of Klamath Basin Salmonids, the Bogus Creek studies provide an additional opportunity to recover CWTs and collect scale samples (which are used in the final determination of age composition).

Bogus Creek Study Objectives Summarized:

- A) Determine the in-river run size (escapement) of fall Chinook salmon returning to Bogus Creek during the 2003 spawning season.
- B) Determine run timing, spawning distribution, length frequency distribution, and sex ratio for fall Chinook in Bogus Creek.
- C) Collect scale samples and recover heads (containing coded wire tags) from adipose fin-clipped Chinook in order to determine age composition of the run.
- D) Collect biological data for all coho salmon and steelhead observed during the Chinook spawning season.

MATERIALS AND METHODS

Coded-Wire Tagging

During April and May of each year KRP staff insert approximately 200,000 coded wire tags (CWTs) into fingerling (90 fish/lb) and 120,000 CWTs into yearling Chinook salmon reared at Iron Gate Hatchery (IGH). All tagged fish are marked with an adipose fin clip, which allows identification and recovery of the CWTs when the salmon return during subsequent spawning seasons. The fingerlings receive a ½ length tag while yearlings receive a full length tag. These tags contain a code that allows identification of four separate groups of fingerlings and three groups of yearlings. One of these yearling groups are raised at Fall Creek Hatchery, which is adjacent to Fall Creek (a tributary to Iron Gate Reservoir), an excellent source of high quality water. 2002 was the first year that Fall Creek yearlings carried a unique code, which may provide the necessary data to determine if Fall Creek yearlings have a higher survival rate than IGH yearlings.

Operation of the Bogus Creek Fish Counting Facility

A video fish counting system was installed at the Bogus Creek Fish Marking Weir for the first time during the 2003 Chinook salmon spawning season. In previous years, a fish marking weir was operated at the Bogus Creek facility. A temporary Alaskan style weir was installed to direct migrating fish into a concrete flume and fish trap. The trap was operated seven hours a day, seven days a week, throughout the Chinook salmon migrating period. All Chinook salmon passing through the weir were measured (fork length), examined for the presence of any tags, fin clips or other abnormal marks and/or scars, and sexed. All adipose fin clipped (ad-clipped) fish were sacrificed for coded wire tag recovery and analysis. Chinook without adipose clips were marked with a hole punch on the left operculum and released upstream of the weir for subsequent recovery during the spawning ground surveys.

In 2003, the fish trap was replaced with an underwater video counting system which was fabricated by the Department's Fish Habitat Improvement Shop located in Yreka, California. The underwater video system includes a water proof camera housing, viewing window, and counting flume which allowed for unimpeded passage through the facility. The facility was operated 24 hours a day, seven days a week throughout the Chinook salmon migration period. A Sony Hyper HAD digital color video camera (Model No SSC-DC50)¹ and Tokina 4mm F1.2 lens was used to collect the photo image and a Sony Time Lapse 168 Video Cassette Recorder (Model SVT-S3100) was used to record the image to SVHS 120 min video tapes. The time lapse VCR was set to record over a 12 hour period and tape changes were made at 0700 hours and 1900 hours daily. Operation of the video weir began on September 16th, at 1030 hours and ended on November 10th at approximately 0700 hours.

All tapes were immediately returned to the office where each was subsequently reviewed by seasonal and scientific aides in the video lab. During each review staff recorded the date, time (hour:min:sec), and species of each fish observed on each video tape. If the species could not be determined because of poor visibility on picture quality, staff recorded that observation as fish unknown. Staff also noted any adipose fin clips (ad-clips) observed, and recorded the presence of lampreys or any other distinguishable marks that were visible on the tape. During video tape review juvenile salmonids were also measured for fork length (cm) on the monitor screen as they passed through the flume. However, this measurement does not provide the true fork length because of the depth distortion and scale provided by the video recording. Therefore to obtain an estimate of fork length a correction factor had to be applied based on the position of each fish observation within the video flume. To accomplish this, the location of each juvenile fish relative to its position in the video flume, front, middle, or back, was recorded. A measurement of fork length (cm) was recorded. Then a correction factor was applied depending on the location of the fish in the flume (front, middle, back) in the following manner:

Fish in front section of flume,

$$\text{Estimated fork length} = \text{front screen measurement} \times 1.263$$

Fish in middle section of flume,

$$\text{Estimated fork length} = \text{middle screen measurement} \times 1.433$$

Fish in back section of flume,

$$\text{Estimated fork length} = \text{back screen measurement} \times 1.745$$

It must be noted that these measurements are not very precise since there is some subjectivity as to the location of each fish within the flume, and because video screen shots of swimming fish rarely provide an opportunity to obtain a good measurement of the fish when they are perpendicular to the camera angle.

All video data was then entered into computer files and each data file was subjected to two independent edits prior to commencement of data analysis.

Any salmon carcasses that drifted downstream and became impinged on the weir panels were recovered and processed. Data collected on these wash back carcasses included species identification, gender, and fork length. Scales were removed from the left side of each carcass at a location posterior to the dorsal fin just above the lateral line whenever possible. Scale samples were then provided to the Yurok Tribal Fisheries Department for analysis. Every carcass was also examined for the presence of any fin clips, marks or tags. Heads were collected from each ad-clipped fish for later coded wire tag recovery and analysis. Each carcass was also examined to determine whether successful spawning had likely occurred. Female salmon with more than 50% of their egg mass still present in their body cavity were identified as pre-spawn mortalities. Carcasses were then cut in half to prevent sample duplication and returned to the river downstream of the weir.

Spawning Ground Surveys

Spawning ground surveys were conducted twice a week, every Tuesday and Friday throughout the Chinook salmon spawning season. The first survey was conducted on October 14th and the last survey was conducted on November 14th, 2003. A total of ten surveys were performed throughout the season. For the purpose of the spawning ground surveys, Bogus Creek was divided into 4 reaches (Figure. 2). Reach 1 includes the area from the mouth of Bogus Creek upstream to the BCFCF, a distance of approximately 0.3 miles. Reach 2 extends from the BCFCF upstream to a small waterfall approximately 0.6 miles. Reach 3 begins at the small waterfall and continues upstream to a larger waterfall for approximately 2.0 additional miles and Reach 4 continues upstream to a larger waterfall (about 20' high) and fish ladder for a distance of 0.5 miles. These new reach breaks coincide with natural stream channel characteristics that correspond to migration obstacles. Each survey was conducted by three crews (one crew per reach), consisting of a minimum of two people for each crew. All salmon carcasses encountered during the surveys were examined for the presence of an ad-clip. Heads and scale samples were collected for all ad-clipped fish (as well as fork length and sex) in order to recover the coded wire tag for subsequent age determination. Fork length and sex were determined and a scale sample was collected from a systematic random sample of every 10th Chinook salmon carcass encountered during the survey. Female carcasses were examined internally to determine spawning success; those with greater than 50% of their eggs still remaining in their body cavity were identified as pre-spawn mortalities. Once examined, all carcasses were cut in two to prevent recounting during subsequent surveys.

Population Estimate

The Chinook salmon spawner escapement for the area of Bogus Creek upstream of the Bogus Creek Fish Counting Facility was derived from a direct count of all Chinook salmon observed on the video tapes that recorded fish as they passed through the video counting facility. To estimate the total escapement to Bogus Creek, the number of Chinook salmon carcasses observed downstream of the weir (a direct count for Reach 1) was added to the direct count of all Chinook salmon that were observed passing through the video counting facility.

Hatchery contribution of Chinook was derived by multiplying the number of CWTs observed for each CWT group by its production multiplier value (the inverse of the proportion of each group of juveniles that were tagged). For Reaches 2, 3, and 4, an additional expansion (the inverse of the number of fish handled during spawning ground surveys divided by the direct count observed at the video counting facility is applied. Therefore, the sum of each tag group observed in Reaches 2, 3, and 4, is multiplied by the sample expansion value.

RESULTS

Bogus Creek Fish Counting Facility

A total of 12,681 fall-run Chinook salmon were observed moving upstream and 64 Chinook salmon were observed passing downstream back through the facility during the season. On October 16th the video tape was not changed during the morning hours and, as a result, the facility did not record fish passing through the BCFCF between 9:13:23 hours and 18:36:46 hours. To estimate the number of Chinook salmon that may have passed through the BCFCF during this down time an average of the number of fish observed for the equivalent time period on the day before (10/15/03) and after (10/17/03) was determined. Based on this procedure an additional 444 Chinook salmon was estimated to have passed through the BCFCF on 10/16/03. Therefore, the total number of Chinook salmon that entered Bogus Creek upstream of the BCFCF is estimated to be 13,125.

The first Chinook salmon of the season was observed passing through the BCFCF on September 19, and the last Chinook salmon was observed on November 10, 2003, the last day of weir operation for the 2003. The peak of the run, as observed at the BCFCF, occurred on October 19 when 970 Chinook salmon were observed (Figure 3). Chinook salmon were most active during daylight hours especially in the late afternoon between 1500 hrs and 1900 hrs. Movement of Chinook salmon decreased dramatically after 1900 hours and remained at low levels until the early morning hours when movement through the facility began to increase substantially (Figure 4).

Spawning Ground Surveys

A total of 2,485 Chinook carcasses were counted in Reach 1 (the lower 0.3 miles of Bogus Creek, downstream of the weir) and a total of 8,502 Chinook salmon carcasses were counted in Reaches 2 through 4, located upstream of the BCFCF, for a total of 10,987 fish. Of these, staff randomly sub sampled a total of 1,080 carcasses from which fork length, sex, and pre spawn mortality (females) data was recorded. A total of 412 male carcasses were examined which ranged in fork length from 44 cm to 107 cm with an average fork length of 80 cm (Figure 5). Based on the length frequency distribution, staff determined that grilse Chinook salmon were ≤ 57 cm in fork length. Therefore, grilse comprised approximately 1.5% of the Chinook salmon run in Bogus Creek during the 2003 season. A total of 668 female carcasses were examined and they ranged in fork length from 50 cm to 95 cm with an average fork length of 75 cm (Figure 6). Of the 668 female Chinook salmon carcasses that were examined, 90 (13%) females died prior to spawning. Based on the ratio of male to female Chinook salmon carcasses that were randomly sub sampled during the spawning ground survey, males comprised about 38% of the run and females comprised 62% of the run.

Chinook Salmon Run Size Estimate

The sum of the direct count for Reach 1 (2,485 fish) and the result of the number of Chinook salmon estimated to have passed through the BCFCF (13,125 fish) yielded a total Chinook run size estimate of 15,610 in Bogus Creek during the 2003 spawning season. Based on a grilse cut off point of ≤ 57 cm fork length, the 2003 Chinook salmon run on Bogus Creek was comprised of approximately 231 grilse and 15,379 adults.

Hatchery Contribution

Chinook salmon heads (containing CWTs) were collected from a total of 85 ad-clipped fish that were recovered during spawning ground survey efforts. Staff was able to recovery and read the CWT from 59 of the heads collected during the survey. Of the remaining 26 ad-clipped fish, 7 heads contained tags were unreadable, 6 heads contained tags were lost while attempting to remove them from the head, 12 heads did not contain a tag, and 1 head was lost. In order to estimate the probable origin of the 26 ad-clipped fish for which there was no tag, or had a tag that was unreadable, staff assigned a code to these 26 ad-clipped fish based on the proportional distribution of the 59 tags that were readable. The estimated contribution of hatchery origin Chinook salmon in Bogus Creek is presented in Table 1. Hatchery origin fall Chinook salmon account for 17% (2,722 fish) of the total fall Chinook salmon run observed in Bogus Creek. The remaining 83% (12,888 fish) of the run is therefore assumed to be of natural origin. No CWT recoveries were observed for age 2 (grilse) Chinook salmon from Bogus Creek this year. Age 3 Chinook salmon comprised 49.4% of the estimated hatchery origin Chinook salmon and age 4 Chinook comprised 50.6%.

Coho and Steelhead

No coho salmon were observed at the BCFCF or during the spawning ground surveys during the 2003 season. However, operation of the BCFCF ended on November 10th which coincides with the early part of the coho salmon run. At IGH, the first returning adult coho salmon was observed on October 30th, and only 16 adult coho salmon and 37 grilse coho salmon had entered IGH from October 30th through November 10th of 2003. Therefore, the findings presented do not accurately reflect coho salmon runs in Bogus Creek because the operation of the BCFCF ended during the early stages of the 2003 coho salmon run.

A total of 280 steelhead trout (Oncorhynchus mykiss) were observed on the video tapes recorded at the BCFCF during the 2003 season. Staff was able to record on screen fork length measurements for 279 steelhead trout. Estimated fork lengths (cm) for these fish ranged from 4 to 63 cm (Figure 7). In the lower Klamath River creel survey the Department considers all steelhead trout ≥ 43 cm in fork length to be adults. Using the same criteria, 27 of the 279 steelhead, for which fork lengths were estimated in Bogus Creek, would be considered adults.

Staff attempted to identify the presence of an ad-clip on all steelhead trout that were observed on the video tapes. However, this effort turned out to be more difficult than anticipated because of poor picture quality, small size of fish, and movement of fish (blurred image) as they past through the counting flume. Of the 280 steelhead trout observed, 15 fish, or 5.4% of those sampled, appeared to have an ad-clip, 218 had an adipose fin, and the presence of an adipose fin could not be positively determined for the remaining 47 fish. Those steelhead trout with an ad-clip were estimated to range in size from 11.5 cm to 30.3 cm in fork length.

Table 1. Estimated contribution of hatchery origin fall Chinook salmon in Bogus Creek. The estimate is based on coded-wire tags (CWT) recovered from ad-clipped fall run Chinook salmon collected in Bogus Creek during spawning ground surveys in 2003.

Twenty two (22) juvenile fish could not be confidently identified to species, however many of these appear to be small salmonids, most likely steelhead trout.

DISCUSSION

Historic Chinook Runs

Since 1978 the Chinook salmon run in Bogus Creek has ranged from 46,432 fish (1995) to 785 fish (1990) and has averaged 9,710 fish (Figure 8). The 2003 Chinook salmon run in Bogus Creek was the fifth largest (15,610) recorded since the beginning of the Klamath River Project in 1978. The largest run of fall Chinook salmon within the entire Klamath River basin occurred during the 1995 season when a total of 245,543 Chinook salmon were estimated. In that same year the ladder gates to IGH were shut after the hatchery met its egg production goal. Therefore, a significant portion of the IGH Chinook salmon that would otherwise have entered IGH either spawned in the main stem or entered Bogus Creek. This probably accounts for the large return of Chinook salmon that were observed in Bogus during the 1995 season. As a result, the run size estimates for IGH and Bogus Creek during the 1995 season do not accurately describe the run size that would most certainly have occurred if the ladder gates at IGH were left open during that year. Subsequent to 1995, the hatchery policy was modified to allow all Chinook to enter the hatchery irregardless of the numbers of fish that may return. This policy change allows for better monitoring of natural and hatchery components within the Chinook salmon run at IGH annually, and also reduces the potential for hatchery stocks spawn naturally and should reduce potential interactions between hatchery and natural Chinook salmon populations within the basin.

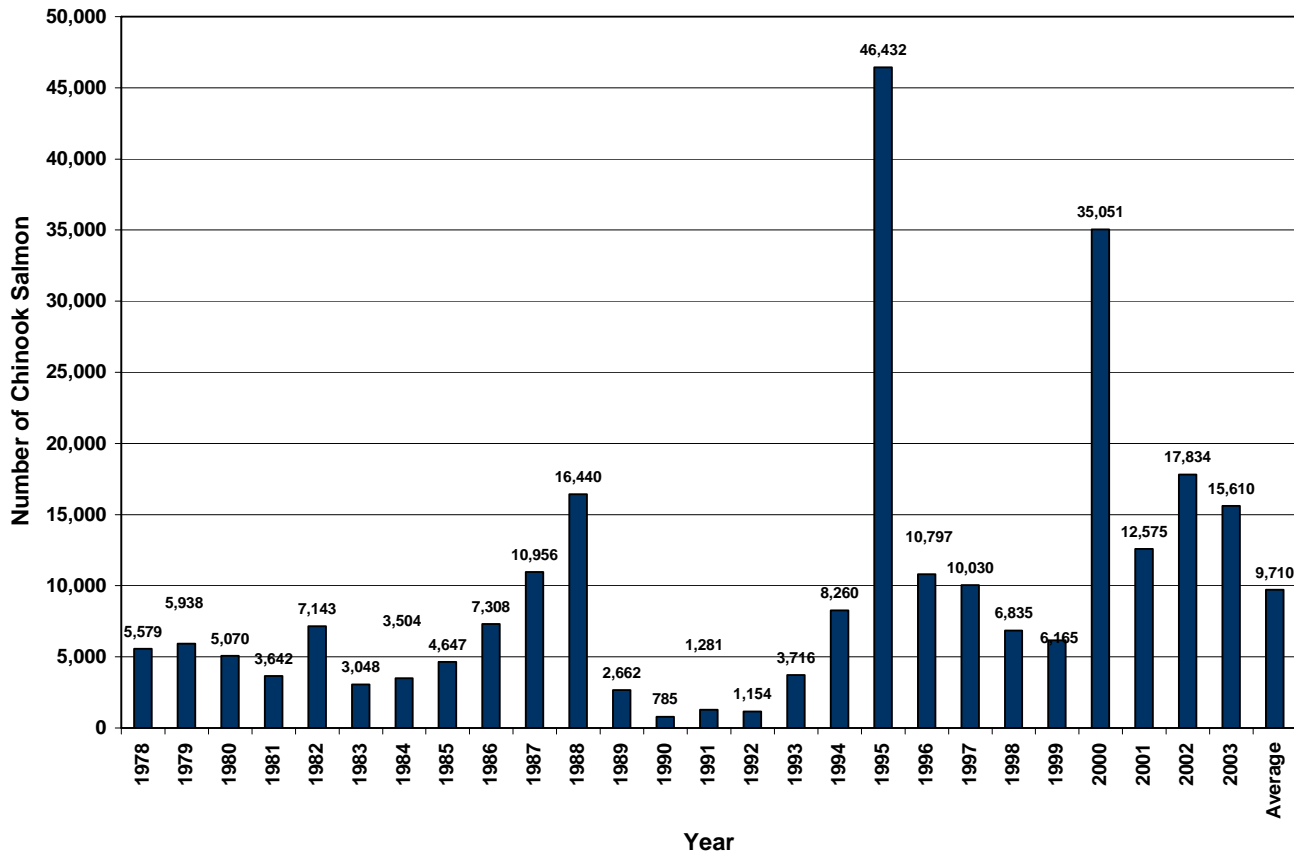

Figure 8. Total Chinook salmon escapement levels estimated to have returned to Bogus Creek from 1978 to 2003.

A comparison between the annual Chinook salmon runs estimated in entire basin (total in river run), Bogus Creek, IGH, and the total natural escapement to the Klamath River basin excluding the Trinity River is presented in Table 2. The contribution of Bogus Creek Chinook salmon escapement to the total in-river run has ranged from a low of 1.9% in 1990 to a high of 18.9% in 1995. As previously mentioned, the 1995 escapement estimate for Bogus Creek was probably influenced by a large number of hatchery fish that were unable to enter IGH after the ladder gates to the hatchery were closed. Therefore, the 1995 run in Bogus Creek presents an anomaly when compared to other Chinook salmon runs that entered Bogus Creek each year since 1978. Since 1996 the contribution of Bogus Creek has ranged from 5.8% to 15.4% of the total in river run within the Klamath basin. In terms of the total natural escapement of Chinook salmon in the Klamath basin, excluding the Trinity River, Bogus Creek has contributed a substantial number of spawning Chinook and its contribution has ranged from 8.7% in 1990, to 56.3% in 2000, and has averaged 31.1% since 1978 (Figure 9).

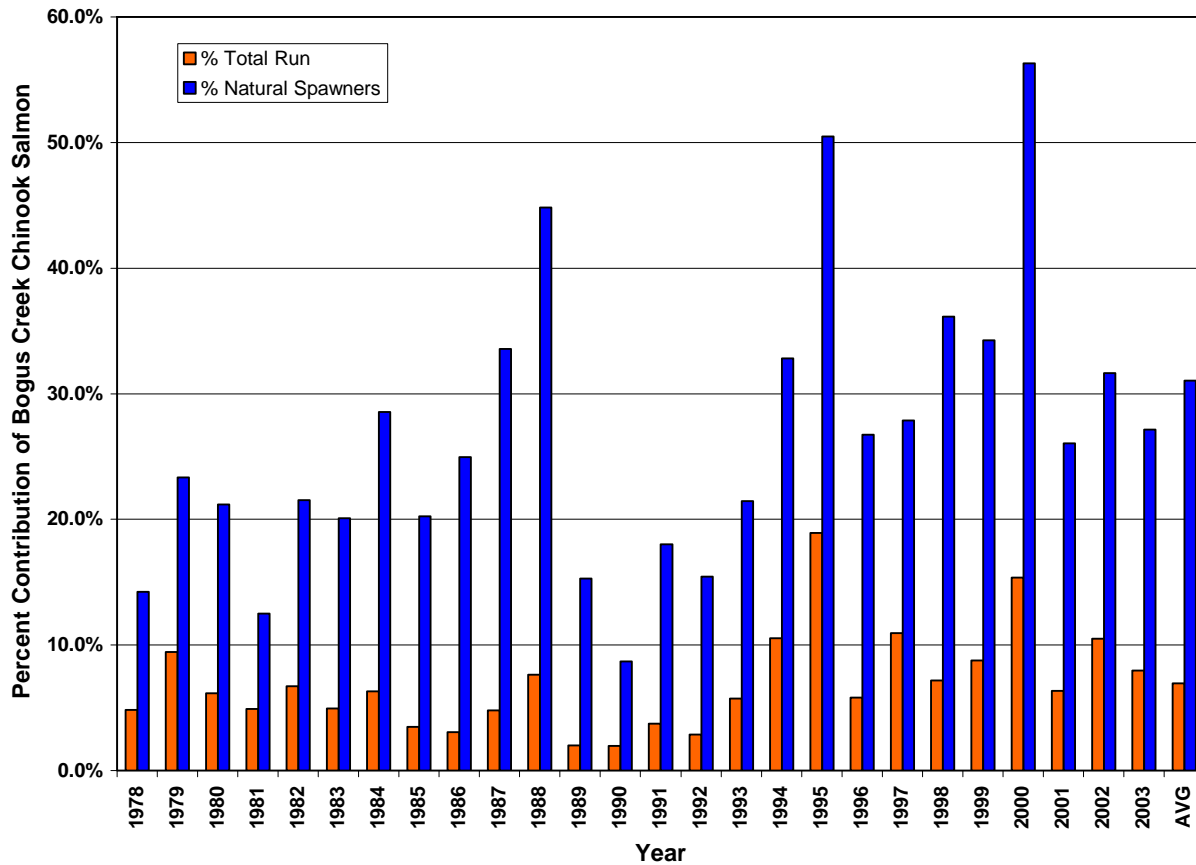

Figure 9. Percent contribution of Bogus Creek Chinook salmon to the total fall Chinook run size estimate for the entire Klamath basin and total natural spawner escapement in the Klamath basin, excluding the Trinity River, from 1978 to 2003.

Historic Proportions of Grilse

The proportion of grilse within the annual Chinook salmon run in Bogus Creek has ranged from a high of 48.2% (1992) to a low of 1.1% (2000) and has averaged 7.5% since 1978 (Figure 10). The percentage of grilse that was estimated in Bogus Creek in 2003 is 1.5%, based on length frequency analysis. The Klamath River Technical Advisory Team (KRTAT) estimated the grilse proportion to be approximately 1.2% based on results of scale analysis conducted by the Yurok Tribal Fisheries Department. Regardless of the method used, the 2003 Chinook salmon run exhibited an extremely low proportion of grilse. Similar results were also found throughout the Klamath basin in 2003. The number of grilse is an important parameter used in the Klamath Ocean Harvest Model for predicting the number of 3 year old fish that will be available during the next fishing season. The low grilse counts that were observed during 2003 will be reflected in the 2004 fishing quotas for harvest of Chinook salmon in the various fisheries within the Klamath Management Zone in the ocean as well as the in river fisheries.

Hatchery Contributions

The KRP has estimated the contribution of hatchery origin Chinook salmon in Bogus Creek since 1999. Over that period of time the contribution of hatchery Chinook to the total Chinook salmon run in Bogus Creek has fluctuated greatly, ranging between 61.6% and 7.5% (Figure 11). Yearling Chinook salmon released from IGH in 1998 (Brood Year 1997) and 1998 (Brood Year 1998) were not tagged prior to release because of budgetary constraints. Without tags on these yearling releases it is impossible to determine their contribution rates, and therefore the hatchery estimates presented for Bogus Creek do not account for potential hatchery returns from these two yearling releases. Three year old returns from these two yearling brood years would have occurred during the 2000 and 2001 seasons. The 2002 return would have been the last year that untagged yearlings from the 1998 brood year would have returned as four year old fish. As a result, the hatchery contribution estimates for Bogus Creek from 1999 to 2002 likely under estimate the total hatchery contribution to Bogus Creek by an unknown number. Even without an accounting of these untagged yearling releases, a large proportion of the 2000 (37.2%) and 2001 (61.6%) Chinook salmon that returned to Bogus Creek originated from IGH.

In 2002, the contribution of hatchery origin Chinook in Bogus Creek decreased substantially to only 7.5%. The actual contribution of hatchery fish in that year may be slightly higher since the 4 year old returns from the 1998 yearling release cannot be accounted for. Nonetheless, the hatchery contribution rate for 2002 is substantially lower than was observed in the previous three years. It is difficult to explain why contributions of hatchery origin Chinook have declined in Bogus Creek over the last two years, particularly in 2002. Examination of Klamath River flow levels at Iron Gate reveal that flows were substantially lower in 2002 compared to 1999, 2000, 2001, and 2003 (Figure 12). At these lower release levels the delta at the mouth of Bogus Creek is exposed creating a shallow riffle which makes migration into Bogus Creek by adult Chinook salmon more difficult. The presence of this shallow riffle may have discouraged hatchery fish from entering Bogus Creek during much of the run. However, flows during the 2003 season were similar to the other years examined when hatchery contribution rates were substantially higher, yet the estimated contribution of hatchery fish in 2003 was still considerably lower at 17.4%. This tends to contradict the possibility that low flows levels observed during the 2002 spawning season were responsible for the low numbers of hatchery fish that were observed in Bogus Creek during the 2002 season.

CONCLUSIONS

Bogus Creek continues to support a large number Chinook salmon within Klamath Basin each year. Although the presence of the hatchery adjacent to the creek has undoubtedly had a tremendous influence on the composition of the Chinook salmon run within Bogus Creek over the years, in recent years the contribution of hatchery origin Chinook in Bogus Creek has declined substantially. It is uncertain whether or not this trend will continue into the future, regardless, the importance of monitoring the annual escapement of Chinook salmon to Bogus Creek for fishery management purposes cannot be underestimated. This becomes even more evident when one considers the contribution that Bogus Creek Chinook salmon have provided to the overall natural escapement levels within the Klamath basin upstream of the Trinity River. This year Bogus Creek Chinook salmon accounted for 27.1% of the natural spawner escapement within the Klamath River upstream of the confluence of the Trinity River, and has accounted for an average of 31.1% of the natural escapement since 1978. Failure to collect this data would negatively impact fishery management efforts within the basin.

Currently, the Bogus Creek Salmon Study is focused on describing the characteristics of the Chinook salmon run annually. With the listing of coho salmon as threatened under both the federal Endangered Species Act (ESA) and California Endangered Species Act (CESA) there is a need to increase our monitoring effort to include coho salmon. However, under current funding levels such an increase in effort is impossible at this time. The Department should actively seek additional funding opportunities as they arise to increase our monitoring efforts to incorporate coho salmon monitoring efforts in the future when possible.

There are no flow gauges or temperature monitoring stations currently in place on Bogus Creek. Establishment of a temporary flow staff gauge on lower Bogus Creek would provide information on flow levels that is currently lacking. A temperature monitoring station would also provide some information on the suitability of Bogus Creek to support rearing coho salmon and steelhead trout throughout the year. If possible, the KRP will develop a temporary gauging station and temperature monitoring site near the BCFCF in the fall of 2004.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The California Department of Fish and Game would like to thank Siskiyou County High School students who assisted KRP staff in completing spawning ground surveys on Bogus Creek. Their contribution was integral to the success of the project. We would also like to express our appreciation to the various landowners who have graciously provided permission to access Bogus Creek on their lands.

The KRP would also to express their sincere gratitude to the Klamath River Task Force and the Yreka Fish and Wildlife Service Office for their funding and assistance in completing this study. Their assistance was instrumental to the purchase and installation of the video fish counting weir used on Bogus Creek for the first time this season. Without their assistance this critically important monitoring effort could not have been completed.
